Editorial

In presenting this volume of the Emory Campus to the students, faculty, alumni and friends of Emory College, we have no apologies to make. We acknowledge that this book has its many imperfections and by no means fulfills the requisites of a typical college annual. We have tried, however, to treat every phase of college life as it is found here in Oxford. So far as we have succeeded it is left to the reader to decide whether we have made a success or a failure.

It is needless for us to tell of the trials and troubles which this volume has cost, but the editors and friends have felt that they have labored in behalf of a good purpose. We hope that in after-years, when the old walls of Emory know not this student-body as students, but as those who have left her class-rooms forever, this annaul will furnish a source of pleasant recollections to them.

We have tried to mix the serious and the gay, to picture the college man as he really is.

To our friends who have assisted us in this publication, we extend our most heartfelt thanks.

History of the Senior Class

As we stand upon the eve of graduation, or rather the dividing line between theoretical knowledge and the field of practical application, with the goal for which we have labored almost within our grasp, we have nothing to regret and are glad to be numbered with that grand body of men known as the Class of '14.

Let us pursue the usual resume of achievement.

"Who in Life's battle firm doth stand,
Shall bear Hope's tender blossoms
Into the Silent Land."

The record of the Class of '14 may not glisten with the golden splendor of victorious achievement of other classes; but the spirit that produces the best that is in a man has ever been manifested in that of the Class of '14.

Let no one think that none of the Class of '14 have drunk deep of the Pierian spring, for diligently have the "Keepers of the Fountain of Knowledge" guided and directed our way and with personal interest they have led us to this spring. And in athletics we have ever proven ourselves "worthy of the steel" of a skilful opponent.

We are proud of the records of our more forensic members. We have borne the loads of each other; we have shared alike the joys and sorrows; our foolish pranks have been mere diversions, with no harmful intent or effects, and yet these will be forgotten as Time rolls on—but the shady haunts of Oxford where we have lived and labored for several years together will ever remain in our memory, no matter where we go, as an oasis in the desert, and the name of Oxford to us will be as the names of old—a glory-circle memory.

Here in this little old village we love, have great men been made and unmade; here character has been straightened and lost; here men have drained the Pierian spring to its dregs—and yet the elements of future greatness remain almost invisible. Still there are features sufficient to forecast for us a successful career and the shaping of illustrious lives that shall in the future ages reflect honor on our Alma Mater. To that end we have striven, and have always tried to uphold the standard of a true Emory man.

C. A. Lester, Historian.
MISS ANNE SUE BONNELL
Alpha Delta Phi Sorority.
A.B. Wesleyan Female College, '12; member and sponsor Senior Class '14; Owls' Social Club; Susie Dahm Social Club; Sigma Upsilon Literary Fraternity.

Although apparently an honor was conferred upon Miss Bonnell being chosen as class sponsor, the honor falls in the highest sense to the class in being allowed the privilege of having her presence precede a class of dignities who may or may not have their names inscribed among the list of Emory graduates. She assisted in the sponsorship of the memorable Emory track team which invaded Macon to return without victory but still possessing high hopes. We have searched the pages of literature in an effort to find some tribute which might truthfully and becomingly be paid Miss Bonnell, but alas! we have failed—no poets have ever breathed sentiments true enough to quote in a tribute to our sponsor, but we

"Fill this cup to one made up
Of loveliness alone,
A woman, of her gentle sex,
The seeming paragon.

"Her every tone is music's own,
Like those of morning birds,
And something more than melody,
Dwells ever in her words."
His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that Nature might stand up and say to all the world—This is a Man.

In the fall of 1910 "Sis" landed in the classic little city. His first undertaking was to explain why he lived in the country. He claims Thompson as his summer home, but says he is a shining star in Atlanta and Augusta society during the rest of the time. In truth he's only a farmer boy, and should feel proud of it, but as to this other false report, it is only a phase of tautology that he tries to spring on his fellow-men. His motto is "Do others or they'll do you." His main hobbies are music, flowers and cosmetics, and he may be regarded as authority on the latter.

He belongs to the species of beings which Shakespeare classifies along with lovers and lunatics; displaying, in fact, symptoms peculiar to both of these as well as to the poet. As the illustration below indicates, he is the author and inventor of "that trilling little ditty in the key of X," "In My Heart." The etymology of his sobriquet, "Hop Frog," is somewhat doubtful. He is, forsooth, a skilled checker-player, though his praises are yet unsung. In spite of this fact, he happens to be one of the few Seniors with a clean record of no "back work" whatever.

Sad and despondent over Ferdie's leaving her, "Little Josephine" has managed to stay on the scene of a lost love affair. Since then, owing to exigencies of occasion, the whistle to which he answers has been changed from Little Josephine to Ape Face, and in this capacity he is rivaled only by Monkey Face Fuller. Joe is a shining ladies' "pest," in fact a veritable hobo acrobat from the old country. We could say something awfully nice about Joe, but we haven't the time. We could tell the "nude" truth, which would not be so flattering, but we haven't the paper.

...top! Look! Listen! Here comes a vaudeville show! Fielding Dillard, Sue Burnside, and Ada Jones! Though Fielding has wandered for many years among the refreshing shades of this classic city, it was not until the fall of '13 that he joined the class of '14. He is a typical ladies' man, the college clown, and a great friend of Goose Grease Lovell. His chief glory lies in his work with Guinea pigs in Histology lab. He joins the epicureans in saying pleasure is the greatest good, and puts to flight all ministers of gloom, melancholy, and worry.

He loosens and lets down his jaw
Then brings it up, the rag to chaw.

Comes one with a smile. Jolly, good-natured, loving all and loved by all, Lucius has spent four happy years at Emory. A friend indeed of the truest type and is always glad to prove his friendship to its extremity. Lucius is very much admired by the King and often Senior Bible class is converted into a lovefeast between the King and his humble subject. Fitts' motto is "Laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and you weep alone."

The atmosphere in the vicinity of Sutherland not being particularly suited to his temperament, Funk resolved last year to experiment with another college. Taking a case of love at first sight, he entered Dude Boyd's Greek Lit class, where he shoots 'em up as he does in most of his other courses. Of his movements and existence during the Christmas holidays, both in Atlanta and at Sub Johnson's residence, nothing will be said here. He is famous for the gentle art of Rook-playing and also for his richly variegated stock of dry wit.

Hickson is one of the samples of Perry, somewhere in Houston County. His chief delight is hanging around Henderson's store and if you have seen him when he wasn't talking don't tell it—you may find a doubter of your veracity. Few know him well, but there are fewer that he does not know. He keeps informed on all phases of college life, but no one has discovered his system.

There are many things which might be said of Cliff, alias "Cat" Lester—but as he chances to be Editor-in-chief of this publication, we don't dare to say much. He is mainly notorious for being a dangerous south-paw ball-twirler, accomplished ladies' man, and more or less (mainly less) of a German scholar. He it was who asked Bo one day whether he wanted him to read the Deutsch in German or English script. Cat is something of a literary genius in the unfathomed caves of his cranium, stimulated probably by reading Bobbie Burns' poems and letters, and writing to his lady.

A man he seems of cheerful yesterdays and confident tomorrows.

In the fall of 1911 "Bobbie" in knee trousers landed at Emory "Ker Plunk." On account of his youth, his guardian Strozier was rather strict on him. He overcame his youth pretty soon, started to chewing gum, using slang, and carrying matches, and drifted into the sea of college activities. He has acquired the appellation "Goose Grease," which he admires very much. His chief delight is advising the King and Sub Johnson. Don't be frightened. He won't bite you; it is only the nature of the beast.

"Squat" is one of the best-liked men in college. He is a terrible ladies' man, for "he has that merry glance which seldom ladies' hearts resist." He is an all-round jolly good fellow, an ideal college lad, who soon discovered, when he was a Sophomore, that college life consisted of more things than text-books. On the athletic field he has done honor to himself as well as his class. Having no opposition he was unanimously elected Business Manager of the Annual.

Now, look who's here! A sandy-haired Missouri lad whose main suit is doing "Wright." Pat entered college in the fall of 1910 and soon began his love case with Madam Geo. Wright, and the subs. He is an all-round college lad, and loves you dearly if he can hear the clinking of the coin; but if not—well, dear reader, you can imagine the rest. He is especially noted for his bravery and once upon a midnight dreary, he came very near winning a Carnegie medal for defending the lives of four society Janes, their gentlemen friends and chaperone. His pet expression is Ish ka bibble.

Be quiet! or you may wake him. Buried in many quaint and curious volumes of forgotten lore, Timothy spends the sweetest hours of his life. A literary genius of rare type who has proven his ability by his splendid productions. By his works ye shall know him, and the class predicts for him a place among the future literary artists. Timothy is a good-natured fellow and is liked by all. The love of some "Brenau Jane," has haunted his breast where learning lies, and he feels proud in saying "I'm in love."

"Mud" is the one Senior who is noted for his dry wit. To look at him, one would think he was an archangel; but being with him a while he cannot help but reveal his inner nature. His chief delight is pulling puns and although no one sees the point at times, he enjoys a laugh at them himself. Mud never misses church (?) and he delights in sitting on the back seat, eating peanuts, chewing gum and pulling jokes. Mud's chief occupation is furnishing Dit Stewart and Timothy Pearce with tobacco. His motto is "If studying interferes with your college life, cut out the studying."

Among the numerous and sundry Quillians who so proudly claim Emory as their Alma Mater, Paul is surely the rarest of the rare. His college career is starred by victories, the results of well-directed energy. As a debater, he has few peers and all will testify that Quillian is quite a quick-sighted quarterback. "Fannie Pearl," that charming little lassie from Valdosta, came to Emory in the fall of 1910. As quiet as a mouse, he spent his Freshman and Sophomore years; but tiring of this, he decided all of a sudden to be a ladies' man. His Junior year witnessed the scene of many love affairs, two in Midway, and four at Bessie Tift. Everything proved successful and almost serious, but some "naughty boy" revealed his nickname. "Fannie Pearl," to his lady friends, so timidity and love began their conflict. All his classmates predict that he will be the first one to plunk down a dollar and a half to the Ordinary.

Cater is one who loves Oxford so well that he almost weeps at the thought of leaving. He entered college in the fall of 1910 and very soon Madam noticed his mathematical ability, casting upon him the great honor of being one of his bootlicks. Cater has been a shoot-em-up during his four years in college and he proudly acknowledges that he burns the midnight oil. Honorable, upright and with a heart most benevolent and kind, his college course has been most profitable not only to himself but to others whose lives have been influenced by his. Here we see exemplified the saying that "Ambition is no cure for love." When a girl's face interposes itself between the pages of Chemistry, so much the worse for the Chemistry. Winning a lady is far more attractive than getting off Analyt or even than playing football. Naylor is, however, a good, whole-souled man if his heart is elsewhere. "Sax," has been making his All-Emory in football for the last four years; ever since this town received him into its bosom. "Nuff sed: but there are other things which demand recognition. He is colloquially known as "Calomel"—not, however, because of any unusual chemical ability on his part. A live-wire, charged with energy, friendliness, and native ability, with not an enemy in all the student-body, he will never sink into oblivion after his graduation.

A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance.
Every man has some salient characteristic which distinguishes him from all others. E. Smith is decidedly the longest man in his class. He is nearly as long north and south as Fitts is around the equator. He is supposed to have entered college some time about the first of the twentieth century, but dropped out in order to help improve the quantity, if not the quality, of the class of '14, where he has won honor on the gridiron, the basketball court, and the diamond. His preparatory course was taken in the outlying suburbs of Oxford, between the handles of a plow.

Homer Clayton Sowell, noted ward politician, boss of the local Tammany Hall, and chairman of the informal meetings of the Hall Room boys. That the minds of all great men do not run in the same channels is shown by the little difference between Madam and him as to whether the latter was entitled to a "rise" in Solid Geometry. Before announcing as candidates for any office, all would-be politicians would do well to consult this oracle and abide by his decisions. Witness the sad endings to certain heedless office-seekers who have failed to obtain his permission to run.

Just why Dit Stewart selected McDonough as his birthplace no one knows, but he seems to feel proud of it. He entered college some time during the latter part of the nineteenth century and has become "the" landmark of Emory College. On Oxford history Dit is well informed, as he has been here so long. In the great game of life, E. Walton holds a full house of hearts. Yet, however his heart may wander, he manages to retain a level, sound head on his shoulders, conducting the affairs of government from the head of the central board, as to the manner born. There is not a man in the student body who is, morally or ethically, a better character. His inaugural address last fall before the students will long be remembered by the underclassmen as a model of verbosity and circumlocution. He spent most of the previous summer in preparing it. As a habitual shoot-em-up he is best known. If matrimony does not prevent, he must inevitably become known throughout the nation in the course of time.

Dick's pedigree above should read as follows: Member; Treasurer; Assistant Special Censor; First, Second, and Third Vice-president; and Chauffeur of the Emory Tea-Drinkers' Club; Delegate from Emory to Decatur; Third German Class, '13; et cetera, and then some. His favorite quotation is from Wordsworth: "A perfect woman, nobly planned, to warn, to comfort, and command." His reputation as an artist of no mean ability was established by his caricature of Emory and Progress last fall. It leaked out last Christmas that he had the distinction of being an "Emory Senior." He has adopted as his motto, "If you want your horn blown well, blow it yourself." To all who know him, however, Dick has proved himself a true friend of real worth and an unselfish college man.

After much consideration and due deliberation "Grandmother," as he is best known, decided to cast his lot at Emory and for four years down the peaceful avenues of college life he has met with overwhelming success. To know him is to love him and he is always ready to show kindness even to the humblest sub. He is a great ladies' man, and it is a proposition to know just how much he is in love. A true Emory man, a pride of the college and especially of his fellow-classmen; and such one is a credit to any institution. Whatever he does in after life will meet with greatest success, for the world is always ready to do homage to such a man.

After tearing himself away from the love and charm of his fair lady in Fort Valley, George Wright packed himself off for the temple of learning. His first impression was a good one and Oxford seemed to please him very much. He became known as "Shoot-em-up" Wright, and Madam soon fell (el) for him. Later he became known as "Forty-two" Wright, and also won a "political rep." Besides these characteristics he is well known in the society circles of the classic village. He is good hearted and has almost been a father to little "Frances Agnes," who calls him "Mamma." Among his many college honors he is a member of the "Bon Ton Rook Association."

Alas! Alack! Weight, blubber and avoir-dupois come in volume. The latest advent is one said Greene, but his hair is red, and so is his face. This gentleman came to us from the University of Virginia, with his main recommendation being the honor of substitute on the Virginia varsity football squad. At this writing the report has not been verified. We leave this to the reader's ability for separating the true from the untrue. He smiles and that goes at a premium.

The Caged Bird

Richard J. Broyles

Who has not seen somewhere in Life's array
The poor caged bird, bedecked in human clay;
For whom each day a restlessness supreme
Mars all the real, and checks the hungry dream,
To whom the glory of the sun and light
Of centuries resplendent and the sight
Of love-lit faces in the dawn, awake
To share his sentiments, and to break
The dull monotony of hollow day,
Are but as mockeries, and would display,
The hopes and joys of others, while all rife
With pain they would reveal his vacant life?
This is the bird who beats his bleeding wings
Against the iron bars of conscious things,
And knows not why
He longs to die!
History of the Junior Class

THREE long years have brought the Junior Class to the brink of their entrance into the select arena where they will soon join the ranks of the high-graduates. This class began with an unusually large number and although time gave an unkind cut by the failure of several members to return in the fall of 1912, several new students were added to the class-roll which have been of material assistance in every field where our class has entered.

A class spirit has pervaded the conduct of every member where as a unit we participated. Personal antagonism was set aside when the Class of '15 was involved in a struggle. The one purpose was victory, and in these efforts we have been rewarded with success.

The first attempt of the Class of '15 in any phase of college life was made when the relay pennant was won in the fall of 1911, which was followed by the annual scrap, where we gave good account of ourselves.

Six pennants in various branches of athletics have been won by the 1915 class. They are relay, '11; baseball, '12, '13; football, '12, '15; basketball, '14.

The destinies of our baseball teams have been presided over by our beloved coach, J. G. Stipe, who has been the greatest factor in our baseball record. The consistent and steady work of our pleasing Coach G. P. Shingler has been of material assistance in giving us the honors of prowess on the gridiron during two seasons.

Our lot has been a happy one in the ranks of high scholarship. We have had a large share of shoot-'em-ups, and we have not lost the pleasure of their association by a retirement for study only. Members of our class have reaped rich rewards in the literary societies, and their oratorical ability has been recognized.

All-in-all, our class has been rich in success in the fields where greatness is measured. We have always maintained a consciousness of the purpose for which we are in college, and it is not amiss to forecast that greatness will come to our members in the world.

A Dirge

I held within my hand a withered rose,
   All crushed and slain,
And as I blew upon its petals torn,
   A sweet refrain.
Alone came to my sympathetic heart.
   It was a song
Like that the drooping swan when dying sings—
   So soft and long.
It seemed an echo from some foreign shore
   Where lilies blow
And fragrant, blushing roses never die.
   So sweet and low
It wafted from the sunset hills afar
   I thought it some
Quaint dirge as through the air the rose’s soul
   Was flying home.

Richard J. Broyles, ’15.
History of the Sophomore Class

"Hat is history," said Napoleon, "but a fiction agreed upon?" In presenting this history of the Sophomore Class, we shall pick out only such fiction as we want, arrange it as we like, and say nothing about that which does not suit our purpose.

No history of this class would be complete without calling attention to its prominence in the various college activities. Since the date of the organization of the class it has furnished some brilliant stars, for both the gridiron and the diamond, who have answered the call of the referee's whistle or obeyed the umpire to "play ball," always fighting hard and determined to win laurels for the Sophomores. Last year we showed the student-body that we could play ball; and under the superb coaching of Professor Peebles we developed one of the best gridiron machines that has ever been seen at Emory as under-classmen. The wonderful Seniors as well as the mighty Juniors were both played to a tie; and they realized that the Sophomores could play football.

In the class-room its scholars have well upheld the general reputation of the class for good work. In debating and oratory the Sophomore speakers have shown that they are well qualified to undertake more difficult work than contests with each other. The literary men of the class have all taken part in the work of the different publications of the institution. In no way have the representatives of the Class of '16 been found wanting.

But, after all, the fact remains, that the primary object of the years spent here is to prepare the men of this class to make history in the future, and from the records of its members we are justified in saying that they have a true faith which is looking up to something better, prophesying to themselves future greatness which gives them energy of purpose, and with their high standard of ideals they will expect great things, attempt great things, and they will accomplish great things.

To the Sophs—

"May you reap all richest harvests
In the fields where life is spread.
With Time's Winter still far from you
And Summer's sunshine on your head."

Sydney Wardlaw Palmer, Historian.

Exituri Te Salutamus

Dear Alma Mater, cradle of our youth.
Farewell! It were not strange that we should grieve
Since we take leave of thee. Four happy years
We've been beneath thy sheltering shades, and now
We put on manhood. Ah! the heavy weight
Of care it brings on shoulders all unused
To bearing burdens. Would that we Might linger yet among thy quaint old halls
A little longer, thumbing o'er again
The same old dog-eared volumes; drowsily
Hearkening the master's droning voice, as oft
We have been wont in other days. But no!
That wish were craven. Shall we then desire
To shirk the struggle? Others went before,
And bore themselves right nobly. Let us then
Take up the fight and bear us well therein,
Valiant for truth. And may no one of us
Ere make thee blush for shame. But rather may
We prove us worthy to be called thy sons.

History of Class of ’17

In the fall of 1913 the race for a dip was begun by the best class of fellows that have been brought together since the founding of Emory College in the good year 1836. These boys entered college with a fixed determination to win for themselves and their class honors and distinction. They started in doing things with a rush, that shows that they have the proper spirit, and the way that they have kept it up shows that there is no lack of grit in the bunch. It has been their special delight to “set off” Seney Hall clock about “once ever so often.” One illustrious member of the class went so far as to set it off while the faculty was busy determining whether or not certain members of the class should continue as students of “Ye Olde Emorie.”

The great day of the Relay Race was a Freshman Day indeed; besides winning the race by a big lead, they “put it over” the Sophs in grand style, in the scrap for the rag. They all fought like old Vets. The class was very ably represented during the football season, and had the distinction of having one of her men chosen on the All-Emory squad. Two of her men were also chosen to be wearers of basketball “E’s.”

That the Freshman class is a progressive class was shown when the custom of all Freshmen wearing a regulation cap was adopted. This is a time-honored custom in most of the larger colleges, and it shows a spirit that Emory College has needed for some time.

The class is not only a class of athletes, but is one of literary men, orators, politicians and “shoot-em-ups.” There are those in the class that have already won distinction in the literary societies and give promise of winning still greater honors before their course is completed. There are some natural born politicians in the class, and still others who almost weep when they don't get more than a mere nine-five in examinations, and still others who are supremely happy with a six-five.

As a whole it is the best class that has been in this ’lil ’ole college since—

Why I Came to Emory

Patillo, Outler, Quillian et al, Lester: "Because I am a preacher's son."

Lovell: Don't ask me now. I haven't time to fool with you.

Penick: "Because I couldn't help myself."

Wright: "Because my pa sent me here."

Stewart: "Because papa wouldn't let me go to Georgia."

Saxon: "Got fooled into believing it was a real place."

Acree: "In order that I might some day become a Bishop."

Wilson: "Somebody left the gate open and I strayed through."

Thompson: "To draw 'Emory and Progress' and become a Senior."

Pearce: "Because Haywood did, and I had a 'leetle' bit of spare time."

Fitts: "To get burned out."

Strozier: "To get an education and the highest office within the gift of the people."
History of Sub-Freshman Class

The full-fledged college man looks down upon Sub-Freshmen with an air of ineffable scorn. The “King” cracks his most sarcastic chestnuts against us. We are forced to occupy the front seats in chapel. Our epithet contains nothing but titles of disrespect and abuse.

The cause for all this infamy lies in only one fact—we are young. We would hazard the opinion that the upper-classmen were not half so prepossessing and pretentious as our class is when they were “Subs.” And yet how their chests swell with pardonable pride as they look upon us from their lordly heights.

We hereby rebel from the sarcasm implied by the name “Sub.” We are not young, unsophisticated, nor do we exhibit the childish qualities that are accredited to our natures. We have the best building on the campus for our recitations and form an essential constituent of Emory.

By our record then, reader, judge us. Wasn’t it our boys who led the front rank of the Fresh scrap line? Didn’t we help cinch that affair from the “Sophs?” Wasn’t it our boys who played the backbone position for the same class football team? Weren’t our boys on their basketball team? Wouldn’t the Freshman baseball team be crippled without us?—YES!

Of course we don’t indulge in the exalted studies of the higher classmen, but we fill our sphere. Very few of them could pass solid geometry, or sub-Latin, or Greek if they stood “exams.” We are not boasting when we say that our mental attainments are nothing inferior to our position. Life is before us, but the first year of college—the acid test of proving good—has showed our worth.

Before us lie four long years till “Dipdom.” But till then we are PLAYING the game.

"Is it so small a thing
To have enjoyed the sun,
To have lived light in the Spring,
To have loved, to have thought, to have done;
To have advanced true friends, and beat down baffling foes?"

Foreword

For various reasons the men whose pictures appear in this department have not affiliated with any fraternities. Not that these organizations do not stand for friendship, love and fidelity, for the non-fraternity men hold these same high ideals.

Among these men will be found true leaders in college life, and whose acquaintances have been recognized in the college world. And on through life as they attempt to practice the high ideals of a true man, they will measure up to these high standards.

The Student Government Association

AN has always been subject to and cognizant of a power ruling his life and directing his actions. By a natural process this force is sooner or later transcribed to acknowledged rules or laws. Unwritten in their embryonic state, yet they grow toward perfection, finally circumscribing the individual so as to fix definitely his range of action.

Such must be the development of all good governments. It must pass through an evolutionary process in order to reach any degree of perfection. Mistakes must be made and corrected for any marked advancement. The individual must make his desire subservient to the whole, all working together for some common and beneficent goal. And this end must be vested in some centralized power whose purpose and duty it is to correct abuses and promote good.

It was because of the lack of this unity of power and inadequate methods of government that the Student Government Association was born. Each phase of college activity was under a different management, working only for its own specific end, and emphasizing its peculiar line of work. In such a condition of affairs there was of necessity a lack of cooperation among the students and thereby a very limited degree of college spirit. The Student Government Association was instituted to correct such errors and to enhance the general good of the student-body. Its marked improvement and ability to regulate and conduct student affairs in its little more than three years' existence is sufficient proof of its success.

The student government is unique in that it supervises and fosters all phases of college activities and yet has all the qualities of a constructive government. It has a president, who presides at the meetings, a vice-president, secretary, a treasurer from the faculty, and four committees, namely, Athletic, Judicial, Publication, and Greater Emory. The chairmen of the above committees, together with the president, vice-president and secretary, form the Central Board, to whom are intrusted the affairs of the student-body. It is their duty to watch closely all affairs pertaining to the student-body as a whole, advise the chairmen of the different committees and initiate such legislation as they may think proper and advantageous.

The Athletic Committee looks after all forms of athletics, keeps the athletic field, tennis courts, and track in condition. It also arranges all schedules for games.
and strives to increase interest in the various kinds of athletics. It has the distinction this year of instituting an All-Emory Gymnasium team which will certainly do much to increase interest in gymnasium exercises. The committee this year is: J. H. Saxon, Chairman; T. B. Neal, and G. W. Griner.

The Judicial Committee's duty is to interpret the constitution and by-laws and see that all offenses are properly punished. The committee is: T. C. Rogers, Chairman; James Inouye, R. W. Bryan.

The Publication Committee supervises the student publications, advising the editors and managers for the betterment of the publications. Under the present regime the Emory Weekly has revived and become a notable success. P. W. Quillian, Chairman; Irwin Innis, J. T. Dismuke constitute this committee.

The object of the Greater Emory Committee extends beyond the active college life. Their purpose is to advertise the college and show to the prospective college men the merits and advantages of Emory. Its work is so undemonstrative and yet its existence is manifestly felt and therefore should be highly commended. This year's committee is: F. A. Wilson, Chairman; C. A. Carlisle, J. W. Nelson.

The other officers of the Association are: E. W. Strozier, President; P. A. Megahsee, Vice-President; H. C. Sowell, Secretary; Prof. J. G. Stipe, Treasurer.

The benefits of the Student Government Association are already evident. Each student is made to feel that he is a part of Emory and its activities and therefore does not hesitate to lend his aid and support. He is given all the benefits derived from it but above all he becomes a distinct and necessary unit in the whole, which is working for the uplift of the student body and a greater and better Emory.

H. C. Sowell.

The Greater-Emory Department extends to every young man thinking of entering college next fall a cordial invitation to come to Emory. We hope to point out to such men the advantages of Emory College.

This department stands for a greater and better college publication, greater literary societies, and an increased enrollment at Emory.
Proverbs of Emory

I. Hear ye, Fresh., the instructor of one wiser than thou and attend to know understanding.

II. Seeth thou a man with a smile on his face as of great joy? Behold he hath received a rise in Analyt.

III. A wise son is a joy to his old man, but the foolish son that falleth below six is a heaviness to his professors.

IV. As a jewel in a swine’s snout, so is a fair lady in Oxford during college term.

V. Woe unto a man who cutteth two many classes, for lo he standeth before the faculty before many days.

VI. Seeth thou a man with a swiped magazine? There is more hope of a thief than of that man.

VII. A lover of sleep shall be unpunished, but he that cutteth eight o’clocks shall perish.

VIII. Chemistry is a mocker, Analyt. is raging and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

IX. My son, fear thou Project and the Faculty and meddle not with Barber’s calf.

X. As the stars fall in Madam’s Astronomy so falleth they who threw snow-balls at Ada.

XII. Let him that thinketh he is taking Philosophy for a cinch beware lest he fall.

XIII. The Sophomore is wise in his own conceit, but the professors that hath understanding searcheth him out.

XIV. A good name is rather to be chosen than filthy lucre, and a pull with the faculty rather than silver and gold.

XV. Heareth thou the sound of the chapel choir? It is as the sound of many waters.

XVI. Ignorance goeth before a flunk and a haughty Fresh. before a fall.

XVII. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after wisdom for they shall receive a pass.

History of Phi Gamma

The birth of Phi Gamma literary society dates back almost to the foundation of Emory College. The trials and vicissitudes which have been visited upon the society run parallel with the history of the college.

Phi Gamma is the older of Emory’s two literary societies and it was founded in 1837. A few months after its foundation several members withdrew to organize a second society which was named Few, in honor of Emory’s first president, Dr. Ignatius A. Few.

George W. W. Stone, whose name was linked with Emory College as a student, teacher and benefactor for over a half-century, was chosen the first president. A Greek name was given to the society which gave a touch of mystery and the purpose which was conveyed in the Greek letter name was to be known to the public only through the letters.

After the establishment of the second literary society regular debates were held between the organizations, and at times interest waxed extremely warm. Few society had chosen a color of red, and in opposition to this Phi Gamma chose blue.

The society suspended work along with the college during the struggle of the sixties when numbers of their membership went to the front. Immediately after the war when Emory resumed work Phi Gamma reorganized, with four former members present.

The annual champion debate was begun in 1873, and Phi Gamma’s first representatives were Dr. C. E. Dowman, W. N. Sheats and O. L. Smith. Phi Gamma won the first decision, and during the years which have elapsed both societies have secured victories with the totals being about even.

The original purpose of the organization has been maintained. It has given students an opportunity to develop their powers of public speaking. The constitution and by-laws have been modified to a great extent, and the changes have often been for the best and at other times for the worse.

The great underlying principle is “To help men to help themselves and be of service to their fellow-men.”

Cranston Williams.

Invocation

Blow, ye winds, and waft a song
Beyond the azure skies,
That I might let the angels know
Of how my spirit sighs
To search the far Invisible,
Where daylight never dies.

Richard J. Broyles.
History of Few Literary Society

MORE important than any other phase of college life is the literary society. Scan the long list of illustrious names that Emory proudly points to as her sons and you will find that likewise they are the sons of the literary societies. In this great work Few has nobly done her part.

Phi Gamma antedates us in this work by almost two years—having been founded almost immediately upon the founding of the college. But in 1839 it was decided that new life and enthusiasm would be engendered if there were a sister society. And so having “chosen sides” to see who would found the new society, eight members withdrew and on August 10, 1839, in the old Day Chapel, held the first meeting of Few Society—so named in deference to the illustrious name and eminent virtues of the first president of Emory—Ignatius A. Few.

From the first the boys went to work with zeal and enthusiasm. Often did the halls resound with animated debate as every problem of greater or less importance confronting the nation has come up for consideration. These sessions would often last all day, adjourning only a little while for dinner. So interested and enthused did they become at times that when the force of logic failed to convince, the minutes give evidence that other methods were employed to encourage persuasion.

The years came and went and Few continued to grow, and still the great forensic battles waged on. But a sad hour came. No longer did these halls resound with debate, but a calm and subdued quiet pervaded all, broken only at intervals by the groans of the wounded boys in Blue and Gray.

After the storm had passed the gallant knights of Few came not back again. Only two returned—Mr. Roberts and Rev. Chas. Lane. Through the efforts of these men Few Society was soon again flourishing; never more, we hope, to lay aside the work she has been doing nobly and well for three quarters of a century.

“With a view to the promotion of Virtue and Patriotism, the cultivation of our forensic powers, and for the sake of general improvement in science and literature” Few Literary Society was established. That these results in the past have to a large measure been accomplished is attested by the lives of her loyal alumni and the influence they have had upon the affairs of both Church and State through a long history. With such a past in such a present we wish and predict for her a most glorious future.

LITERARY
Once upon a time there was a poor Simp who decided he wanted a College Education. Pa allowed that he couldn't be any more kinds of a fool when he got through than he was when he started, and Ma was all for the Frills, so they gave him a clean Shirt and a Bible and packed him off to the Temple of Learning, with a sign hung to him certifying that he had stayed three years in the Boobsville High School without being canned.

When the Lightning Express wheezed into Cov he crawled out from under his seat and hailed the Hay Burner with joy. He stood up in front, behind the Twin Cylinders and it made him real home sick. His thoughts harked back to the Golden Days at home, when he was wont to follow a Hardtail around the dear old hillside, and his Bucket of Slush slopped over.

Arrived in Our City, he inquired for "Professor Madam" and informed that benevolent gentleman that he intended to honor the Junior Class with his Person. When the genial Cigarette regained Consciousness he called feebly for smelling salts and a Trigonometry. Asked what was the Sine of Phi plus Theta, Our Hero replied that he didn't know for sure but thought probably it presaged Rain.

After a similar experience with Mutts, to whom he imparted the Startling Information that Hamlet was the son of some Rude Forefathers who went to sleep in a Country Churchyard somewhere or other, whereupon that outraged Scholar and Author Peeled him One on the Bean with an eraser, he concluded that Junior was a Punk class anyway and decided to enter Sub.

About this time the Alfalfa Whoops stumbled over him, and discovering that none of his immediate family had ever been hanged, they concluded that he was excellent Material. He thanked them kindly, but said that he was already promised to Few.

Pretty soon those Mad, Mad Wags, the Yearlings, found out that he was a Dead
Easy Mark for such amusing little Conceits as the Old One about lifting three men, and thenceforward they made of his life One Grand Sweet Song.

Every time he saw a Sophomore coming down the street he experienced the Novel Sensation of a man who is dropped from the steam room of a Turkish Bath into an ocean of Liquid Air.

One day while passing the athletic field he beheld some Freshmen kicking a football. The Thing looked so simple that he was beguiled into essaying to do likewise. Doc Ward purchased a Shave and a New Car.

Two Strategical Geniuses organized a Social Club and unanimously elected him Secretary and Treasurer. Duties of said Secretary and Treasurer consisted only in providing Eats for the club. When his term expired he modestly declined re-election the club disbanded.

Everybody predicted a bright and glorious Future for him, as Prize A Number One Idiot in the State Asylum.

At the beginning of his second year he was back on hand with the Oily and the Hearty.

He had learned a Thing or Two.

Then he proceeded to negotiate the smoothest Boot-Lick on the Faculty that has ever been secured in the history of this Honourable Pile. Every time Madam pulled the forlorn one about coming from Atlanta to Oxford via Birmingham, San Francisco, and the Orient, or Zeke purged his system of the “When I was in Germany,” Moan, he rolled over on the floor and had a fit of Hysteric Humoritis. On Sundays he arrived at Sabbath School with Ceph and sat through that gentleman’s monologue with the rapt expression of a mind contemplating the Elysian fields. Whenever Happy Crawford sent out an Emergency Call for Mourners he would come up and besplash the Altar Rail with Tears Of Repentance until the Varnish was washed off. He made it a regular habit to Blackslide Every other week in order to be brought back triumphantly into the Fold the next.

He began to affect Long Hair and a Kentucky Colonel black Slouch Hat. Even Oedipus Fell for him. After that he turned his attention to the Hoi Polloi.

He opened an account with Henderson’s, Stone’s, The Arcade and the Bon-Ton, and invited the Boys to step up and name it. Pretty soon they quit waiting for an invitation and started to putting in their orders when they saw him coming down the street. Bill Burt began to remember him in his prayers.
After some persuasion by Ma, Pa sold the Farm and hired out as a day Laborer.

Our Hero continued to keep his mouth shut and dispense the Cooling Beverage and the Fragrant Weed. Pretty soon he came to be regarded as a Power.

Along in the Spring of his Junior Year, after much persuasion by his Admiring Friends he permitted his name to be placed on the Ticket for The Highest Office In The Gift Of The People. Nobody had the Nerve or the Filthy to oppose him and he was unanimously and triumphantly elected.

Next year when the Loyal Sons lined up before Royalty to receive their ten bones' worth of bad Goat Skin and worse Latin the Happy Parents were on hand, their faces radiant with pride and Bar Soap, and heard their Youthful Progeny presented with a Summa Cum Laude, no extra charge.

He is now in the United States Senate.

Fifteen Minutes in Greek Lit.

"Dr. Boyd, are we going to have class today?"
"Well, now, now, now, the class hasn’t informed me otherwise. Now, now, has the clock struck?"

Angry mob replies, "—!—!—naw."
"Well, now, let’s begin. Are we all ready?"

Angry mob replies, "Naw."
"Well, now, are we?"

Mob replies, "Yes."

"Well, how many have read Antigone?"
(One fool holds up his hand.) "Well, have you read it?"
"Naw."
"Well, have you?"
"Yes."

"Well, now, I’ll give you TEN."

"Now, now, how many want books from Every man’s Library? Does everybody want one?"

Angry mob howls, "Naw."
"Mr. Penick, do you want one or the books?"
"Naw, I wouldn’t have one of the —!—!— things."

"Well, now, why don’t you want one of the —!—!— things?"

Outler—"Doctor, was Venus a god or goddess?"

"Well, now, let’s see what Gayley says. Mr. Patillo, where’s your book?"

Pattillo—"Mr. Penick is sick today."

"Well, now, now, have you read Agamemnon?"

"No, sir, but I have Three Weeks."

"Well, I’ll give you TEN."

"Mr. Newson, will you please read aloud the part of Philoctetes?"

"Naw."

"Well, then, we will have pictures."

"Mr. Lovell, will you go see about the current?"

"Yes, Doctor."

"Ask Mr. Billy to let us have some electric juice."
"Mr. Fits, have you a fuse in your hand?"
"Naw. Ha-Ha-Ha-Ha!"
"Well, now, who has got a fuse?"
Outler—"I've got a nickel."
"Well, now, now, now, let's be reasonable, please. Meet me half way, please."
Lovell returns grinning—"Doctor Mr. Billy says he won't give you any juice."

We wont have any pictures today. Tomorrow we will use the Reflectroscope. Do you want the pictures on the wall or ceiling?"
Mob replies, "On the floor."
"Well, now, now, now, all right."
"Dr. Boyd, what do you think is an aesthetic man?"
"Well, now, now, now, that is a good point, Mr. Patillo. Well, now, what do you think?"
"Oh, don't ask me."
"Well, now, now, now, let's see what Gayley says."
"Mr. Penick, who was Aphrodite?"
"How do I know."
"Well, now, now, now, do you know?"
"Naw."
"Well, do you?"
"Yes."
"Well, I'll give you an 8.5."
"I'll call on Mr. Arnold. Well, Mr. Arnold isn't here. Well, Mr. Arnold, why aren't you here?"
"Now, now, now, how many books in the class?"
(One fool says I've got one.)
"Only one book? Well, now, now, I'm getting mad, but it doesn't do any good, does it, Mr. Penick?"
Penick, "Naw."
"Well, now, does it?"
"Yes."
"Well, well, let's get the little points."
"Well, now, now, now, Mr. Patillo, are you aesthetic?"
"Not so that you can tell it, Doc."
"Well, I thought you were; here goes a TEN."

"Now, now, now, Mr. Mize, what do you think of Ismene?"

"Well, Doc, I'll tell you, she is too passionate."

"Well, now, now, now, do you mean by that she is aesthetic?"

"—!—!—!— Naw.

"Well, that's fine."

"Well, now, now, now, this is Apollo Belvedere."

"Now, now, he's nude (angry mob applauds) (he grabs him and hides him from sight). Well, now, now, now, meet me half way, please."

"Well, now, this is Venus de Milo."

Quillian—"Doctor, is September Morn a copy of this?"

"Well, now, now, now, don't let's ask these questions about nude forms."

Clock strikes—

"Next lesson, take the next twenty-five pages. Read up on 'Prometheus Caught, or The Chambermaid's Revenge.' "
The Emory Spirit

In every college or university there is a certain pervading spirit or moral atmosphere which is characteristic of the institution.

Yale is a diminutive democracy; Harvard has more of an aristocratic atmosphere; the University of Virginia stands for freedom of thought and action; and so we might go through the list of our great educational institutions.

If we would attempt to characterize the spirit of our own college we would call it Christian manliness, an ideal which is the noblest among young men.

This spirit has predominated the whole life of our college; it is the cherished heritage left by noble men, who have gone before us and we gladly and reverently accept it as a gift no money could buy.

It is this which makes our Alma Mater so dear to us. Those things we have derived from text-books we could have gotten at other colleges, the life and pleasures we could have enjoyed at other institutions; but the things which have most influenced our lives, the moral atmosphere in which we have lived these four years, this is in some respects peculiar to our college and it is in this we glory. By it we are lifted from the plane of selfish personal gratification to a life of labor and service for others. Under its influence we are turned from the sensual and materialistic to the cultivation of the true and inner man, the man of the heart.

We who have received this blessing are the ones who will hand it down to future generations.

Are we preserving the integrity and purity of the ideals of our fathers? Are we alive to a sense of responsibility and the share we have in moulding this college spirit, and creating this moral atmosphere which will be a blessing or a curse for those who follow us? If we are, then our college is secure.

Poor she has been in the past, and poor she may continue to be in the future, but with this one endowment she will always be rich in all that counts for this greatness in life—she will build not for time but for eternity.

Our Benefactors

The 1914 Campus is now out, and first we wish to thank the advertisers who have made the publication possible.

Thanks to the friends of the Campus among the student body, faculty, and elsewhere, who have given us their appreciated assistance.

Thanks to the kind printers who have endured and sympathized with our ignorance, and the engravers who have greatly assisted in making the book attractive.

To one and all we give our thanks, and trust you may be sympathetic for future annuals.

The Service We Render

Our Printing Department was established originally as an accessory to our advertising business, we being engaged in planning ways and means for securing, increasing and developing business through effective advertising, with a special department for Schools and Colleges.

We discovered that a demand existed for artistic printing of the highest class, so we purchased the best modern machinery that brains could devise and money buy. Our equipment being complete, we engaged the services of experts—men of proved ability in photography, art, type-setting, color printing and book-binding.

Ours is the Only Organization in the South equipped to take up a booklet, catalog or college annual at its very inception and carry it to successful and artistic completion. We do all the work, and therefore do not divide responsibility by farming out parts of it.

Prices are neither the highest nor the lowest in dollars and cents, but are as reasonable as possible, consistent with the service rendered.

We solicit an opportunity to serve you.

Prof. J. O. Bagwell, Pres.,
Bagwell Business College,

Dear Sir:

On June 1, 1910, I entered your College. After studying Chartier Shorthand ten weeks, I accepted a position with the First National Bank, West Point, Ga., as stenographer. On January 1st thereafter was elected to the position of Assistant Cashier, which I now hold.

I attribute my success largely to the efficient training received while I was in your school.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) WILLIS JOHNSON.

Positions Secured for all Graduates

There is a great demand for well trained office help, the college being called on during the last ten days to fill more than a score of positions, paying from $50 to $75 a month. We placed Misses Higgins, Hill, Mauney, Hines, Alman and Williams. Also Messrs. Wyatt, Chapman, Booz, Smith, Wimbish, Wisdom and Bradford. Yet a number of good openings were unfilled from a lack of graduates.

Time and Expense One-Half

You will save one-half the usual time and expense by attending Bagwell Business College. The Great Chartier Shorthand and Bliss Bookkeeping Systems enable students to complete the course in either department in from eight to twelve weeks. Do you wish to earn more? If you are ambitious, write for new Catalogue and special 10 DAY offer. Address,
